

Milo and the Brave Little Dragon

A Rocky Storybooks sample

Milo was seven, and he had one big wish: to fly. One golden evening, a small green dragon named Pip landed in his garden, right between the sunflowers. "Hop on," said Pip. "The sky is waiting." Milo held on tight, and off they went, over the rooftops and over the river, while the whole village waved from below.

That night they read stories under the stars, Pip glowing softly like a lantern. Milo learned something he never forgot: brave does not mean never being scared. It means going anyway, with a friend beside you. And every night after that, whenever Milo wished to fly, Pip was already waiting in the garden.

The End

This is a sample of what Rocky makes: a story written and illustrated for one child, from their name, their favorites, and the adventure they want. Order yours at rocky-storybooks.pages.dev